PROCTOR THE ASTRONOMER. Ten years ago, the name of Richard Anthony

Proctor was absolutely unknown; five years later, it was familiar in scientific circles in London, but comparatively unheard of outside; and today it is familiar as household words to every educated man in England, and to many thous-ands in this country. Yet, the man who in so brief'a space has conquered fame, and attracted the respectful admiration of astronomers in both hemispheres, is only thirty-six years old now, and did not begin to study astronomy till he had passed his five-and-twentieth year. Barely eight summers have flown since his maiden work appeared, and in the interval he has contributed a score of volumes to the library of science, some of them profound, many of them entirely original, and all of them thoof them entirely original, and all of them tho-roughly elevating and purely philosophic in tone. In addition to these works, Mr. Proctor has written constantly and voluminously in most of the leading English periodicals, and has fought successfully more than one brilliant and stoutly contested battle with some of the oldest and ablest savans in Europe. Notably was this the case in his memorable struggle with the venerable Astronomer Royal of England, Sir George Airy, who had achieved a world-wide reputation, and had published seven or eight of the nine quarto volumes of his Astronomical Observatians, before his young antagonist was born. The dispute in question arose out of the widely divergent views set forth, upon the one hand, by Airy, and, upon the other, by Proctor, as to the manner in which the approaching Transit the manner in which the approaching Transit of Venus might be utilized to the best advantage. Sir George Arry, having originally, by an unfortunate choice, adopted the approxi-mate process in dealing with the abstruse cal-culations involved in the working out of this delicate problem, had been strongly advised by Mr. Proctor, so far back as 1869, to adopt by preference the exact process. Delisle's method having been selected by Airy for the Transit of Venus in 1874, his keen-eyed critic at once pointed out that Halley's method was in every way to be preferred, whereas in regard to the next Transit—that of 1882—Delisle's would be better than Halley's. He farther insisted, from the first, that the Astronomer Royal, in his selection of points of observation in Hindostan, had overlooked many of the most desirable. And the young astronomer was right in both instances, as is shown by the fact that the leading astronomers of England at their last meeting, in session at the Board of Visitation of Greenwich Observatory, were unanimous in urging the Government to adopt the suggestions made by Proctor four years before. This is but one out of many similar instances which might be cited of the extraordinary courage, keenness of perception and farsightedness of this the youngest, and, in some respects, the most brilliant, of living astronomers. - Scribner's Magazine.

A WILL SUIT.—A letter from Marshall, Michigan, says: "A contested will case, in which Bishop Simpson, of the Methodist Episcopal Church is a legatee, is exciting much attention in this county. Nearly a million dollars is involved in the dispute. Thomas Duncan, his brother Milliam, and their father immigrated from Ireland to America in 1849. In Pittsburg the father pursued his calling as a surveyor, and Thomas became a clerk in the Novelty Works. A year or two afterwards Thomas invested $300 in the oil regions, but it was a bad investment, and as he was about to re-enter the Novelty Works, his brother William gave him $300 and urged him again to bore for oil. In 1862 the oil began to flow, and Thomas made money rapidly. He subdivided his farm and sold much of it. The property fell into so many hands that affairs were complicated, and Thomas called his brother to his assitance. William conducted the business, receiving $5,000 a year, and at one time an unset diamond, and at another a pair of gloves; but there were misunderstandings between the brothers, and they progressed slowly. The father died in 1862. Thomas took care of his mother and other members of the family. He became irritable, and was capricious in his favors. The fortune that had been thrust upon him was too much for his general equanimity. In the oil regions he received a serious injury about the head and after that was weak-minded and vacillating. He joined the Methodist church and was regarded as an exemplary member. In 1870 he went to Ireland to visit his old friends, and died there in 1871. His

Quite a colony of skilled farm laborers have been induced to migrate from Ohio and Michia gan to Walker county, Alabama, a movement which has awakened a considerable spirit of improvement in that region; and, as we have lately shown, if others who contemplated breaking away from their old homes will only turn their steps to the South instead of the cold, in-hospitable regions of the far off West, they will find their condition far more rapidly improved, and really at a less cost than what they will ex-perience in getting settled at the West. We allude now to men of small means and of strong sinews, who are not afraid or ashamed to work. Lands are cheap at the South and eassly improved, and the intelligent farmer who has a small capital can clear enough almost in a single

A CONSIDERATE PARSON. -A Leavenworth clergyman, while preaching his sermon one Sunday evening, perceived a young man and woman under the gallery in the act of kissing each other behind a hymn book. The good parson did not fly into a passion and discharge a volley of anathemas at the misguided pair, as some would have done, but, tender hearted as Goldsmith's Village Pastor, he merely broke his sermon short off in the middle of "thirdly," and offered a fervent prayer in behalf of "the young man in the pink necktie, and the maiden in blue bonnet and gray shawl, who were profaning the sanctuary by kissing one another in pew No. 68."

his old friends, and died there in 1871. His remains were brought to this country by his mother and a brother. In his last illness it is said he signed there different wills within a few days of each other."

His last will makes numerous bequests and nominates Bishop Simpson and James Long, of Philadelphia, executors. The brother William decided to contest the will. Counsel of marked ability have been secured on both sides, and Bishop Simpson is daily in attendance. The contestants are trying to show that the testator had frequent spells of aberration, and that his brain must have been effected. They have arrayed the best medical testimony on their side.
